MR. TAYLOR'S NOMINATION

The Choice of the Kentucky Republicans Regarded as Weak.

He Is an Unknown Quantity in Blue Grass State Politics-Looked Upon as Machine-Made Candidate-The Bradley Faction Hostile-Todd, of Louisville, a Disturbing Element.

The nomination of Attorney General Tayor as the Republican candidate for Governor of Kentucky is thought by discriminating observers of politics from the as possible, we have put them in Bluegrass State in Washington to carry lots and marked them as follows: with it many elements of both strength and

It is remembered that Attorney General Taylor was comparatively an unknown factor in the political equations of Kentucky intil within the last three or four years. Up to the day of his nomination for Attorney General four years ago it is said that he was about as potent a nonentity in the councils of his party as could have been selected at the time by the Republican onvention. He was, it is said, one of those political dark horses who are not infrequently entered in political races only oment or two before the popular bugle summons the contestants to the starting Boys' Crash and Madras Pants, point. For this reason it is admitted that Mr. Taylor will have the prestige of never having done anything to awaken personal hostility in his own party, and will advantage somewhat from the fact that though little may be said in elaboration of his political services to the people of his State, yet there is nothing that may be pointed to in his career which could be used effectively to injure him with the people He has behind him, it is argued, also the creditable official record as Attorney Gen-eral—a record which though neither brilliant nor in any way remarkable, has been nevertheless generally acceptable. In a word, it seems that the Republicans have tried studiously to select a candidate who vould be on general grounds impervious to political attack; and it is popularly ad-mitted that in naming Mr. Taylor the par-ty has succeeded in making a nomination which will be attractive, more than for any ---- other reason, on account of the respec-table political obscurity of the nominee. This disposition to rest securely on the defensive and to win the election on the policy of letting the Democrats make the mistakes, seems not only to have named the candidate but also to have shaped the platform. The planks of the frail structure upon which the Republican candidates will have to stand, it is thought, are about as weak and unseasoned as political timidity can make them. Wherever a cer-tain note is sounded it is said to be utterly discordant with the wishes of the great majority of Kentuckians and, indeed, of Americans generally. The perfunctory declaration in reference to trusts, the endorsement of the Presi-dent's amendment to the civil service, and the unreserved commendation of Algerism and Hannaism in the National Administration, reveal, it is said, all too vividly the sinister purposes of the Republican party, which the nomination of a highly respect-able "unknown" had sought to conceal.

An opportunity will coon be given the people to penetrate what is alleged to be the negative attractiveness of such a programme. It is thought by Democrats that the result will be one which Republicans will not be able to contemplate with complements.

It is said that the Republican candidate Our eyes are fastened on fall—and these six big double floors must be cleared for the new goods that are to come. Arrange the payments to suit your own convenience—weekly or monthly—no which have resulted in severe and painful wounds. It is said that an effort may be made to heal the wounds, but that the scars will remain in evidence for years to come. It is pointed out that the Bradley faction is not altogether in love with the Taylor following. It is known that the Bradley and Hunter factions have thus far refused to bury the hatchet. It is admitted that former Mayor Todd of Loiusville has made no effort to conceal his determination to get square with his enemlies.

It is feared that the negro vote of the State cannot this year be kept in line for the Republican candidates. Besides these incidents, there is throughout Kentucky a feeling that seems to resent the peculiar manner and methods by which the Republican nomination was made. It is boldly because that influences from already and the control of the contro lican nomination was made. It is boldly charged that influences from abroad controlled and dictated the selection of Mr. Taylor. It is alleged that Senator Hanna, in all his glory, rarely equaled the autocratic spirit which dominated and domineered the convention at Lexington. It is said that the Republican nominees owe their selection to the gratuitous suggestions and efforts of certain railway and cornorate influences in and out of the corporate influences in and out of the State. In conclusion, it is remarked that there is in certain Republican sections a sumbering, distilled opposition to the influences and methods, to the tone and the fluences and methods, to the tone and the tendency of the Lexington convention. What seemed to be so harmonious on the surface will, it is thought, prove to be only the calm that precedes the storm. For these reasons it is thought that the Democrats have no monopoly this year in the field of discord in Kentucky politics.

ARMS FOR VOLUNTEERS.

Preparations at the Bureau of Ordnance for Providing Them.

The fighting equipment of the voluntee roops to be sent to the Philippines is engaging the attention of officers of the Bucau of Ordnance. Rush orders have been sent out by telegraph directing the supply depots to forward at once to the different egimental rendezvous 500 mess kits for use by the volunteers as they go in camp. he soldiers are to be provided. The new the soldiers are to be provided. The new volunteer army will be supplied with the latest pattern Krag-Jorgensen rifle of the 1898 type. It is the same kind of gun as the regular troops use and has a velocity of 2,000 feet. Only smokeless powder ammunition will be furnished the volunteer regiments. The value of target practice or the recruits has caused the Ordnano Department to make extra efforts to pro-vide ranges for the troops at the different rendezvous. At each of the places named there are facilities for target practice, but the department has found that it is nec-essary to supply in many cases material to put the ranges in proper shape for use Accordingly, orders were issued yesterday o officers of the Ordnance Department directing that the ranges be put in proper shape as soon as possible. The Bureau of Ordnance has scopped the manufacture of the Krag-Jorgensen gun of the 1898 model, there being on hand an abundance of guns of this type. The num-per ready for use at the Springfield Armory nd at Benecia Arsenal are about 55,000 to 60,000. The reason, however, for the issuing of orders stopping any further manufacture of these guns is that the department is at work perfecting a type of cun that will be far superior to that now in use. The new 1839 model will be an improvement in every way. The sight will e provided with a wind gauge and th cun will have a greater velocity, the sight being graduated to 2,200 feet, na against ,000 feet in the gun now in use. The work of experiment and investigation with refice to the new gun is nearly completed and it is expected that the manufacture of the new small arm will begin within a

THE PARABLE OF TRUSTS.

Being an Account of How an Over production Begot Hark Manna. Now in the days when the people had chosen a new king over the Americanites and men stood upon the walls of the cities were taken with it. And because of the great overproduction many men hungered and thirsted, and there were those who had not raiment with which to cover themselves, and there were those who wore bare feet because that there was an over-production of sandais.

And the people found much fault with the overproduction, and they gathered them-selves together and cried one to another: "Behold, here am I. I have not of food, yet there is an overproduction of food."

And the wise men of the party answered and said unto them, "Verily, this is because of thy underconsumption." And the people were amazed and departed each into his own home, saying, "Verily, the Republican party doth live."

Now it came to pass that a certain rich man who had great wealth and precious stones and possessed many slaves, even unto those whose votes and influence in Legislatures he had purchased. And this man's name was called Rockefeller, beman's name was called Rockefeller, because he was possessed of much rocks. And he came unto the wise men of the Legislatures saying: "Behold, there is a great overproduction in the land and the people cry against it. I will relieve them of a portion of the burden by taking unto myself the oils of the land and I will hold the oils that they may not cause an overproduction and burden the people."

And the wise men of the Legislative halls had much joy and cried aloud, saying:

And the wise men of the Legislative halls had much joy and cried aloud, saying: "Oil hall Rockefeller, for in him do we put our trust." And the people hearing the loud rejoicing caught up the words and cried, "Trust, trust." And henceforth was Rockefeller known as "trust."

And it came to pass that Rockefeller waxed mighty and fat. And he took the oil of the country and stored it iput tanks that there be no overproduction. And those of the people who failed to give over their oil were cast into prison and their oils were taken. And when all the oils had been taken, the men who had gathered oil were idle and were sent to hunt for other labor. hunt for other labor.

hunt for other labor.

But there came upon the land a great overproduction of coal. And so great was the overproduction that few men had fuel for their fires. So there came a good Samaritan out of the wilderness, crying: "Behold, I come to relieve you of your overproduction of coal. As has my brother Rockefeller done, no will I do likewise." And he bought up many wise men of the Legislatures and went about and gathered together all the coal into his bins and storehouses. And the people and those who sat in the market places again took

p the cry, saying, "Trust, trust." And there came men from every land Frain. T. Ludiow, J. T. Barber, F. Apgar, a certain centurion, one Hark Manna.

And Hark Manna was the greatest of the trusis and knew all the trusts and had dealings with them. And when it was come to the time when no more trusts might be formed and the overproduction still was, Hark Manna called the trusts together, saying: "Behold, we have it all. We are but waiting for an air trust and a sun trust and it will be completed. But the people see not that we are good and kind and are crying for another King who will not deal in trusts. Therefore, let those of us who can, go out into the high-ways and byways and cry aloud. Down with the trusts! And the people will again be with us and will vote with us and will say, 'Verily, we have killed the

The principal work by the department all was well. And a certain man of the Sugar Trust who was called Havemore, because that he was exceeding greedy, betain of his tribe took him up into the temple and sat him upon a seat. And he opened his mouth and taught them, saying, "Verily, I have taken from the people many cubits of shekels. I am the Sugar Trust. I am a wise dingbat. Blessed are the trusts for they shall inherit the earth. Lay not up treasures for yourself, but give them to the trusts."

And the people marveled at these teachings and they grew atraid of trusts and said, "Verily, we have not yet killed the trusts." And the centurion, Hark Manna, departed into other lands and said unto the natives: "Even a trust hath much troubles, and the way of the Republican party is hard."

So the people set themselves together to swat the trusts upon their belmets, and many strange things are written in the First Epistle of Fingree to Alger. And the last of the trusts was the beef trust, which begat Aegan, for this was the limit and the people slew it.

These things came to pass in the third year of the anti-trust law. Sciah!

Comptroller Tracewell Adheres to His Civil Service Decision. R. J. Tracewell, Comptroller of the Scon after he reached his office a reporter handed him a copy of the late letter of the Civil Service Commission to the Secretary of the Treasury, in which it was asked that the Comptroller review his desirion of April 1 last, relating to the appointment and pay of deputy United States marshals. Mr. Tracewell said he had not read the letter before, although he had seen extracts from it while away. He Licut. Col. Webb C. He stated that the President had prac-tically settled the question by taking deputy marshals out of the classified service the war with Spain and was ordered to Tampa to report to General Shafter for duty with the expedition about to leave for to change the views he had expressed in the decision, and intimated that he would maintain the same position in his reply. He added that the courts have repeatedly held that deputy United States marshals were not Federal officers within the mean-ing of the law. Consequently he thought the act of a former President in pincing them within the classified service was clearly illegal.
